A bulletin of the Chinese Nationalist School for the Study of Revolutionary Practices,¹ in Chinese, and an English translation of this bulletin have been placed in the CIA Library. A condensation of the document, which contains considerable detail, follows:

- a. This bulletin specifically concerns the measures of training for the Fourth Graduating Class of the Joint War Operations Research Class of the Party-Political-Military Cadres of this institute. The instruction for this particular curriculum is based on a general outline resolved by this Revolutionary² Institute. The Fourth Graduating Class will be in session for three months.
- b. The courses of study will include current affairs (party, political, and military), lectures on special topics (related to various phases of the Kuomintang, the USSR, and warfare³), and discussions of special topics (in relation to various phases of party, political, economic, social, cultural and educational, military, and foreign affairs).
- c. Leaders and specialists in the various fields will give the lectures.⁴
- d. The current session will be organized in seven branches (for party, political, economic, social, cultural and educational, military, and foreign affairs); and each student will be a member of a team for one of these branches and will engage in the study of a related subject. Students will do joint research and may also make a deeper individual study of the special subject or of a branch subject. There will be discussion groups and both individual and group written reports. The institute's education committee members and guidance committee members will participate in discussions and give their instructions. Forums on research, a disciplined life, Communist matters, and current events will be held a specified number of times.
- e. The reports on current affairs and the lectures on special topics will take about three weeks, the discussions on special topics will take about nine weeks, and the rehearsals (under the military section) will take about one week.
